Preoccupied Bride

There are seven scenarios where you should send a thank you note to an invited wedding guest and they include:

A wedding guest who attends and brings or sends a physical gift.

*Thank them for their presence & present.

A wedding guest who attends and brings or sends a monetary gift or gift card.

*Thank them for their presence & present.

A wedding guest who attends and brings or sends a gift with a group of people.

*Thank them for their presence & present.

A wedding guest who attends and donates their services or help on the wedding day as a gift, such as arranging flowers, greeting guests, distributing wedding favors, etc.

*Thank them for their presence & service/help.

A wedding guest who attends but does not bring or send any type of gift.

*Thank them for their presence.

A wedding guest who does not attend but sends a physical gift.

*Thank them for their support & present.

A wedding guest who does not attend but sends a monetary gift or gift card.

*Thank them for their support & present.

There are many wedding details that are negotiable, but sending thank you cards is not one of them. You realistically won't have time to individually thank every guest on your wedding day, so it's only appropriate to express your appreciation for your guests' presence and presents through a thoughtful note. It's doesn't have to be long—less can be more in these circumstances. The most important thing is to acknowledge their support of you and your partner.

Preoccupied Bride

Preoccupied Bride Events, Inc. is an established wedding + event planning company in Chicago with a 5-star reputation for planning expertise, quality service and attention to detail. Owner Maya Devassy Tarach started the company in 2017 after she planned her own wedding the year before and saw the striking similarities between wedding planning and her previous position as a project manager. As a result, Maya became a certified wedding & event planner and provides partial and full planning services to busy couples who are stressed, crunched for time and need guidance with wedding planning.
